How We Programme

Queer East is working towards a de-centred, community-focused programming model. This year's feature film, performing arts, and literature programmes are curated by Yi Wang. The Short Form strand is led by Emily Jisoo Bowles, together with the nine participants of Up Next: Future Film Curators Lab. The visual arts programme is guest curated by Aki Hassan and april forrest lin 林森. We also work collaboratively with an extensive line-up of guest curators, who have contributed individual events in our Short Form, Expanded, and Beyond strands.

Queer East hosts year-round events and programmes. If you have an idea and would like to explore the opportunity of working with us in the future, please send a short pitch to proposal@queereast.org.uk, addressed to Yi Wang.

It's Queer East Month! Welcome to the sixth edition of Queer East Festival, featuring our most ambitious programme since our journey began in 2020.

The four-week-long festival will showcase over 100 titles, including features, shorts, documentaries, and moving image work, exploring the ever-evolving queer landscape across East and Southeast Asia. Our Expanded strand continues to reimagine the relationship between audiences and screen content, with a newly-added Beyond programme that broadens our geographical reach to Central and South Asia.

Activism, community, and the collective memory of queer history take centre stage in this year's programme: from an avant-garde cult classic shot in Shinjuku in the 1960s, to a verbatim theatre play about queer elders in Singapore; from a heartfelt documentary on lesbian advocacy, to an intimate dance piece about queer belonging.

Reaffirming our commitment to a community-based, open programming approach, we continue to further our collaboration with guest curators and introduce the first cohort of our Up Next: Future Film Curators Lab. Their creativity, enthusiasm, and fresh perspective have played a significant role in shaping a vibrant festival line-up.

The richness of Asian and queer communities forms a vital part of the UK's identity. Over the past six years, Queer East has forged a space for bold, alternative, and multifaceted expressions of artistic queerness.

Being queer is chaotic yet beautiful, challenging yet hopeful. In a world where the radical spirit of queerness is needed more than ever, thank you to our funders, partners, artists, filmmakers and team members, and to each of you for being part of our adventure.

I hope you enjoy the festival!

● Kubi
Japan, 2023

Runtime	Director
131 Mins	Takeshi Kitano
April 23 BFI Southbank 18:00

- UK Premiere
- Opening Night

In legendary director Takeshi Kitano’s mesmerising historical epic, rival warlords battle for supremacy over feudal Japan. In the 16th century, Lord Oda Nobunaga is waging war against several clans, while asserting sexual control over his generals in order to intimidate them into loyalty. But when one of his vassals, Araki Murashige, stages a rebellion and promptly disappears, Nobunaga assembles his other vassals and orders them to capture the fugitive. But who has the skill to survive the web of shifting alliances, brutal passions, and vengeful betrayals?

Offering a darkly comic perspective on the relationship between political intrigue and homoerotic desire, Kitano directs this bloody spectacle with panache. Thirty years in the making, this strikingly violent film comprehensively debunks the myths of masculinity, ethics, and honour that have defined the samurai genre onscreen.

- Q&A

In Edhi Alice, director and queer activist Ilrhan Kim interrogates how documentaries about trans communities are made: the creative decisions, relationships, and ethical questions involved. The subject of the documentary is Edhi, who works as a counsellor for LGBTQ+ teens in Seoul, and has decided to undertake gender reassignment surgery.

Edhi’s story intertwines with that of Alice, the lighting technician on the film crew and an older trans woman, who is preoccupied with challenging popular stereotypes about female and male bodies. This powerful and thought-provoking documentary refuses to compromise in its depiction of post-surgery recuperation, but offers an authentic portrayal of the trans experience and allyship in South Korea. Edhi Alice is a generous, delicate film and—courtesy of Alice’s lighting—a visually stunning one.

● Murmur of Youth

Taiwan, 1997

Runtime
106 Mins

Director
Lin Cheng-Sheng

26 April
BFI Southbank
14:50

● Introduction

Two adolescent girls in Taiwan, both named Mei-li, meet when they get a job in a cinema box office. Chen Mei-li is from an affluent family, but does not get much warmth from her embittered father and selfish mother, while the father of Lin Mei-li, a construction worker, wants to spare his daughter from the hardships he has faced in life.

The two girls begin to bond as they chat about family, work and school; but gradually, their conversations become more intimate. Released at a time when Taiwanese queer cinema was rising in prominence, this drama by award-winning director Lin Cheng-Sheng explores the complex connections between family, society, and the individual. Beautifully capturing the bittersweet essence of youth, this poignant coming-of-age story features sensitive performances from Liu Ruo-Ying and Jing Tseng.

BFI Southbank
18:40

● Introduction

Ace is a tall and awkward teenager who moves to an all-girls Catholic high school in the Philippines. The volleyball coach spots Ace on her first day, and invites her to try out for the team. She is initially no good at the sport and socially ostracised, but things begin to change when she falls for the highly motivated team captain, Jana, who dislikes her because she sees her as a threat.

But the girls and their teammates must nonetheless join forces: not only to successfully compete in competitions, but also to face up against a more disturbing, insidious threat. Powered by authentic performances, Samantha Lee's heartfelt film captures the resilience of the young athlete as she struggles for acceptance, and the strength of female solidarity in a society rigged against women.

Ryan and Daniel, two childhood best friends and aspiring actors, spend one final weekend together before Ryan moves to Canada with his fiancé. Wanting to create one lasting memory, they decide to make a movie... about two guys making a movie, about two guys making a movie, about two guys making a... Along the way, bottled-up secrets arise as they unpack their decades-long friendship and put their extremely unique dynamic to the test.

With a combined 3.5MM+ social media followers, an extremely unique cast pioneers the first ever meta-Asian-stoner-bromantic-coming-of-age dramedy, which explores the intricacies of male friendship through the unique dynamic between an Asian-American straight and gay best friend. Co-directing with Katherine Dudas, Harrison Xu and Ivan Leung star as the two friends in this cinephile comedy.

● Under the Moonlight

Indonesia, 2023

Runtime 86 Mins	Director Tonny Trimarsanto
	29 April BFI Southbank 18:00

- UK Premiere
- Q&A

The cheerful Nur works as a cook at an Islamic boarding school in Yogyakarta, Indonesia, where all the adult students are transgender women. Here, they can live the way they choose to, in stark contrast with the hostile world outside, where they are abused because their lives are said to be incompatible with the values of Islam.

“Say no to LGBT”, instruct posters in the street, warning of a “contagious disease”, while the women have to be alert against the police and extremist groups. Nonetheless, they continue to go about their daily lives: cooking, praying, singing, and occasionally taking an HIV test, enlivening things with self-deprecating jokes. Capturing the day-to-day activities of the women in a laid-back manner, director Tonny Trimarsanto’s deeply affecting documentary is a testament to the resilience of this community.

● Some Nights I Feel Like Walking

Philippines, 2024

Runtime
102 Mins

Director
Petersen Vargas

29 April
Barbican Centre
18:20

● Introduction

Following the death of his boyfriend, the teenage Zion runs away from home and finds himself at a Manila bus terminal one night. Here, he meets a group of street hustlers including Uno, whose casual sensuality stirs hidden feelings in Zion. While some of the group are suspicious of Zion, they nonetheless take him under their wing—until a shocking incident compels them all to leave the city, and take a journey into the past. In Some Nights I Feel Like Walking, award-winning director Petersen Vargas conjures up a part-real, part-fantasised nightscape: edgy and erotic, drenched in neon, the onscreen environments become increasingly surreal and propel the story forward.

A talented cast captures the vulnerability of queer youth in this lyrical exploration of desire, home, and belonging.

● Where is My Love?

Taiwan, 1996

Runtime
56 Mins

Director
Jo-Fei Chen

30 April
Barbican Centre
18:15

- Introduction
- Double Bill

Taipei in the 1990s: Ko is a young gay writer who has written a story about his sexuality, and is encouraged by his mentor to enter it into a prestigious writing competition. But that would mean publicly revealing his homosexuality, so Ko must decide whether or not to remain in the closet. Meanwhile, Ko's working habits are disturbed by the presence of a man whom he picked up for sex. Chen's acclaimed film from 1996 artfully evokes the furtive queer lifestyles of the time—the cruising in parks and the anonymous encounters—while subtly capturing the rhythm of the writing process and the textures of everyday life.

Ultimately, this is a film about profound loneliness, the yearning for love in a culture that is not quite ready to accept it.

● Incidental Journey

Taiwan, 2001

Runtime
61 Mins

Director
Jo-Fei Chen

30 April
Barbican Centre
18:15

- Introduction
- Double Bill

After breaking up with her girlfriend, student Ching goes on a road trip around Taiwan. On the island's east coast, she encounters hitchhiker Hsiang, an older, solitary artist. Hsiang takes Ching to visit her friend Ji, who lives on a peaceful rural farm with her husband. Here, Ching struggles to find inner peace, while Hsiang confronts long-repressed yearnings. A meditative reflection on female desire that features accomplished performances, Incidental Journey made its mark in Taiwan's film history, offering a daring and frank portrayal of lesbian love on screen.

Using the pastoral, mountainous locations to powerful effect, director Jo-Fei Chen conjures up an idyllic, utopian environment: a place where the women, far removed from the messy complexities of urban life, have the time and space to contemplate their pasts.

- Q&A

Khim-Hok is an elderly man who, suffering with a limp, has come to depend on his wife Siu-Tuan over the years. They live in an old house on the urban fringes of Taipei, and while their lifestyle is precarious, they have established a comfortable daily routine, despite their tendency to bicker. Absent from their life, however, is their estranged son, whose existence remains largely unspoken. Shot on 16mm film, this feature debut by co-directors Tzu-Hui Peng and Ping-Wen Wang paints a raw and sensitive portrait of domestic life, exploring the complicated relationships within a family broken apart by past conflicts.

Veteran actors King Jieh-Wen and Yang Kuei-Mei subtly capture the couple's lingering feelings of regret, in what commences as a quiet study of household rhythms—but morphs into a profound exploration of pain, loss, and the transience of existence.

● Introduction

This taboo-busting Taiwanese drama from 1980 was directed by Mi-Mi Lee, a female pioneer in an industry then dominated by men. Hsiao-Peng is sent to a maternity home for young, single pregnant women—most of whom have been sent there by their embarrassed parents, who want their daughters to have the baby in secret and then adopted.

Hsiao-Peng slowly overcomes her depressive thoughts and builds strong bonds with the other women; and after moving out, they continue to support one another. In advocating for atypical family models, Unmarried Mothers was ahead of its time, while its emphasis on female agency still feels genuinely empowering 45 years later: the sequence when the friends arrange their household furniture, set to an orchestration of ABBA's Dancing Queen, is unlike anything else you'll see in Taiwanese cinema.

With support from the Ministry of Culture, Taiwan and Taiwan Film and Audiovisual Institute.

Content Notes: Contains abortion, sexual assault, misogyny, distressing scenes of forced separation.

● 1 Girl Infinite

● UK Premiere ● Introduction

Lilly Hu both directs and stars in this vivid portrait of girlhood, teenage love, and frustrated desire. Yin Jia and Tong Tong (Xuan Yu Chen and Hu), have carved out a life together: shoplifting for food, joyously pelting oranges at cars, and sharing a bed.

Within the walls of their small apartment, they are tied together by an intensely physical, intimate bond; but in front of other people, Tong Tong appears cold and unfeeling towards Yin Jia. When Tong Tong begins a relationship with a drug dealer, the devoted Yin Jia is prepared to sacrifice all that she has. An assured and visually stylish debut based on a true experience, 1 Girl Infinite is set in Hu's hometown of Changsha, China, which is portrayed with great affection, even while its characters dream of being elsewhere.

Content Notes: Scenes of sexual assault, violence, and images of blood.

Over two decades, Lai Lai Ballroom became famous amongst Shanghai’s gay community, and was popular with middle-aged and elderly gay men. “Lai Lai” translates as “Come, Come!”, and was a welcoming encouragement for those who felt outcast. Before it closed in 2018, the venue was frequented by patrons with all kinds of stories, captured by this documentary: a monk who yields to his own desires, an HIV-positive man experiencing personal turmoil, and a transgender person who feels marginalised.

Romantic encounters, separations, reunions: Lai Lai saw it all. But gradually, the space lost its glory, and nobody knows whether it will ever reopen. With tender insight, Yunyi Liu and Bozhi Wei’s film takes a close look at this space of sanctuary, and the sense of community it created for the lonely souls who used to frequent it.

On a small Japanese island, life revolves around the changing seasons. Winter is time for ice hockey at school, but the young Takuya isn’t too thrilled about it. His real interest lies in Sakura, a figure skater from Tokyo and a rising star for whom he starts to develop a genuine fascination. Coach and former champion Arakawa spots potential in Takuya, and decides to mentor him to form a duo with Sakura for an upcoming competition.

While winter persists, the two children form a harmonious bond—but the snow is destined to melt away. In My Sunshine, director Hiroshi Okuyama offers a subtle critique of the social expectations surrounding gender and sexuality, poetically evoking the joy of childhood emotions and the struggle for acceptance.

● Silent Sparks

Fresh out of prison, the young Taiwanese gangster Pua is drawn back into the underworld, compelled not only by financial necessity, but also by the desire to reconnect with the person he longs for, his former cellmate Mi-ji. Pua navigates the criminal margins of society, full of anticipation for his long-awaited reunion with Mi-ji, only to find it falling short of his expectations. Amidst the complexities of underworld relationships, both Pua and Mi-Ji find themselves grappling with difficult choices.

Director Chu Ping takes what could be melodramatic subject matter—a gay gangster—and fashions an artfully shot, exquisitely textured drama that explores different facets of masculine identity. Subtly performed, Silent Sparks offers a cultural exploration of marginal lifestyles and codes of criminal behaviour, but is fundamentally a tragicomedy about Pua's confused persistence in seeking love.

● Love and Videotapes

In the summer of 2001, in a small town in the Philippines, 16-year-old Andoy searches for his long-lost father: in VHS tapes. Together with his best friend Pido, a fellow film buff, he browses the local video store and attends communal TV viewing sessions; by watching movies together, the pair cement their friendship and gain moments of respite from the harsh realities of life. But for Andoy, video also serves to fuel his sexual awakening and emerging queer desire.

When he befriends charismatic hairdresser Ariel and mysterious newcomer Isidro, Andoy begins to ask himself who he wants to be. Ryan Machado's first feature is a dreamlike coming-of-age tale that uses magic realism to depict the teenager's journey of self-discovery.

It tenderly evokes the Philippines' by-gone VHS culture which is—like Andoy's childhood—on the brink of disappearing forever.

● Q&A

This documentary from LGBT activists Zhao Jing and Shi Tou revisits the 1995 United Nations Fourth World Conference on Women, which was hosted in Beijing. The conference was attended by 300 lesbian women from around the world, whose organisers sought to facilitate queer participation, visibility, and recognition in the context of broader discussions around women's rights.

The first-ever lesbian tent at a UN NGO forum was created, where ideas were shared, connections were made, and identities were affirmed; the gathering helped spearhead the birth of the queer lala movement in China. Featuring footage of the event, and interview commentary from those who participated, We Are Here testifies to the importance of global queer interactions in shaping the ongoing struggle for equality.

● Batch '81

Runtime
100 Mins

Director
Mike de Leon

12 May

18:20

Batch '81 is a groundbreaking psychological drama directed by Mike de Leon. The film depicts the titular fraternity's harsh initiation of new batch members, as seen through the eyes of student Sid Lucero, played by Mark Gil in his breakout role. With its depiction of vicious, sustained hazing, the film is both an unflinching study of sadomasochistic college fraternity traditions, and a camp metaphor for life in the Philippines under the Marcos regime.

Hailed as one of the greatest Filipino films of all time and now restored in 4K, Batch '81 originally premiered at the 1982 Cannes Film Festival during the Directors' Fortnight. Gil's unsettling performance as the student with a silent, unwavering belief in the fraternity allows the film to pose troubling questions about the profound psychological need for social belonging.

Content Notes: Contains sexualised violence, politicised violence and historical depictions of race, which viewers may find offensive.

In a sleepy town in China, a middle-aged man is unwilling to endure a stagnant existence, and experiencing true love, decides to come out of the closet. Meanwhile, a lesbian couple go in search of a gay man, in order to get married and have a child. Behind these fiery love stories lies an absurd drama about identity politics, as these lonely souls struggle with the legacy of the communist past.

Zhang Zhiyong gives a superb performance in the lead role and won Best Actor at the Golden Horse Awards, where the film was nominated in all the major categories; it also won best cinematography and editing. Styling daily reality with a biting black humour, director Geng Jun subtly critiques popular assumptions about gender roles, social etiquette, and what is considered age-appropriate behaviour.

In this tense, slow-burn thriller, Zi-Jie is a young Taiwanese fencer who reconnects with his estranged older brother Zi-Han, who is released from juvenile prison after seven years. Zi-Han killed an opponent during a fencing competition but insists that it was an accident and he is innocent of murder. Wanting to believe him, Zi-Jie goes against his mother's wishes, allowing Zi-han to train him for the upcoming national championships. Drawing on her own experience as a professional fencer, Singaporean director Nelicia Low explores the unconscious desires and repressed cruelty that shape the brothers' relationship.

Liu Hsiu-Fu gives an outstanding, complex performance as the stubborn gay teenager, matched by Tsao Yu-Ming as the disconcerting older sibling who might be a victim of circumstance—or a sociopathic killer.

● Looking for an Angel

● Q&A

Takachi, a young gay porn star from a small town in Japan, is found dead in Tokyo. At his wake, two of his friends, Reiko and Shinpei, recollect their time together, attempting to piece together fragments of Takachi's life. What emerges is a sometimes contradictory portrait of a desperately lonely man who longs for love and kindness: but can his life ever really be understood by others? Akihiro Suzuki's impressive debut feature challenges assumptions around sexuality, presenting characters who are androgynous or whose sexual preferences are ambiguous, rejecting the idea that desire is something fixed or unchanging.

Filmed in a lo-fi, indie style, Looking for an Angel is a quintessential example of Japan's dynamic queer cinema scene, interweaving past and present, memories and stories, as it offers an impressionistic account of the elusive Takachi's existence.

Content Notes: Contains scenes of nudity, sexual violence, discussions of suicide, homophobia.

● Crazy Love

Director
Michio Okabe

17 May
Institute of Contemporary Arts
18:00

● Q&A

Michio Okabe's subversive underground film was shot on 16mm in Shinjuku in 1968, and documents the radical spirit of Japan's creative and artistic scene in those years. Crazy Love is structured as a collage of diverse activities and performers, including a happening by avant-garde art group Zero Jigen (Zero Dimension), Genpei Akasegawa's fake bill, a march by futen (hippies), and parodies of adverts and cinema entertainment.

Okabe was influenced by Kenneth Anger's Scorpio Rising but developed his own distinctly kitsch, camp aesthetic, which is fully in evidence here; the director himself appears onscreen, acting out roles including James Bond. Challenging established social norms and codes of sexual behaviour, Crazy Love is a testament both to a liberated, experimental moment in art and film, and to an iconoclastic filmmaker.

Content Notes: Contains scenes of nudity.

Invisibility has often been a key survival technique for queer individuals, allowing them to blend seamlessly into a straight world by day, and build underground communities by night. But in an age when queer representation is increasingly spotlighted in the media, is all this visibility good visibility? From times when we need to make our voices heard, to moments when we choose to escape into metaphors and opacity, these short films examine the multifaceted and contradictory notion of queer visibility.

We all carry our own histories, cultures, languages, and desires—but also those of others. How do we situate ourselves when we belong neither here nor there?

From Vietnam to Germany, Tokyo to London, migration is a journey of both preservation and loss, complicated by queer-ness. Across nebulous landscapes of gender identity and family ties, this programme explores the tensions of navigating multiple cultural terrains, and the cracks in between.

● Q&A

An experimental non-fiction and fiction film programme explores the suffocation engendered by frontiers and borders across historical, social and personal terrains. Balancing the double sense of threat and possibility offered by trespassing and errantry, these works examine subjects carving out spaces of liberation and reflection amidst various forms of entrapment.

Two works from Okinawa capture the island’s palimpsestic history through various modes—the autobiographical and the performative; McMullin’s work re-stages indigenous fa’afine folklore; while Daphne Xu and Pom Bunsermvicha turn to the fateful odysseys of our central female protagonists.

Inspired by Sara Ahmed’s writing on both the “orient” of sexual orientation and the “orient” of Orientalism, this programme plots a cartography of how othered bodies inhabit spaces where we are not at home—how we etch new desire lines off the straight path.

Here, we lean into the spectacle of exoticism, the familiar “strangeness” of the Orient as object, to unveil its contrivance. But queer Asian subjects also refuse to come into frame, allowing us to inhabit shadow, ambiguity, and instability through their gaze. These are experiments in moving through space queerly: what does it mean for a body to be oriented, to feel at home?

How do memories and embodied histories serve as acts of feminist and queer resistance in the face of erasure? Silences in historical narratives are encoded in archives, where underrepresented histories are written out.

Embodied experiences of gendered violence during slavery, genocide, and war remain fundamentally unrepresentable. These histories are thus at risk of erasure from dominant narratives and memories. By turning towards fables, land, bodies, and communities, we can decolonise archives and look for different ways of honouring alternative histories beyond institutions.

Including 7 audiovisual artworks, archive displays, and a workshop, this event explores what it means to re-remember history.

The desire of material fetishism rarely includes a fetishisation of its production. For example, the rubber catsuit, potent with visceral sensualities, hides the conditions of the agrarian class, the biological miracle of the laticifer cell, or the blood of tumultuous histories. But a real fetishist leaves no stones unturned in their obsession. For them, desire does not exist without a rubber suit which does not exist without the rubber plantation which does not exist without colonial projects in Southeast Asia which does not exist without.

Taking the transformative potential of the material fetish as a starting point, this programme intrudes into the typically veiled processes of fetishisation and opens up the political, historical, industrial and emotional conditions of a fetish’s construction. The (moving image, porn, music video) works in this programme point towards the fluxes of material desires, and the interconnectedness of things.

- Performance

By travelling to the United Kingdom from the Philippines via Italy, this performative screening aims to create affective bridges through Pinayist and ecotransfeminist discourses and embodiments. With two films and pole dancing, we will focus on the significance and intersections of land, body and spirituality in Filipino embodiment and imagination, and how, through these, diasporic communities can find proximity to their motherland within the sacredness of their bodies-as-land.

The screening will feature a performance by Alison, followed by a hybrid conversation with the artists Ram Botero, Bunny Cadag and Alison.

● Transpositions
Philippines, 2021

Runtime

Giulia Casalini

Diwata is a performance for camera, exploring precolonial Philippine mythology from a contemporary, ecotransfeminist lens. Engaging with notions of gender and ecology through a spiritually anitist lens (anito being the locally specific nature spirits), Diwata introduces three manifestations of the divine: Dalikmata, Magindara and Tara, who appear in three different ecologies of Mindanao.

A Sword, A Spectre, A Song invites viewers into a realm where ancestry, mythology, and diasporic memory collide, reimagining East and Southeast Asian (ESEA) identities through experimental storytelling and vivid visuals. From matrilineal karaoke to ghostly echoes, neo-mythical figures to diasporic longing, these films delve into resilience, transformation, and belonging.

Through personal histories, cultural legacies, and spectral recollections, the works offer a space for reflection, resistance, and reimagination—an invitation to reclaim the past, reshape the present, and reimagine the future. Featuring Bones Tan Jones, Eelyn Lee, Sadia Pineda Hameed, susan pui san lok, and Tianhui Wu.

This event will be followed by a concersation with bones tan jones and a workshop led by Wingshan.

● Grandchildren	Runtime	Director
UK, 2018	5 Mins	Bones Tan Jones (YaYa Bones)
Grandchildren celebrates queer community through a vibrant dance and spell-casting ritual. Inspired by the apocalyptic TV show The Tribe and Computer Vision Dazzle paint, the film challenges binaries and hetero-patriarchy, blending creative resistance with imaginative, body-driven storytelling.

● Saam Sing 三星	Runtime	Director
UK, 2021-24	8 Mins	Eelyn Lee
Saam Sing 三星 reimagines ESEA identities through neo-mythical characters, blending ancestral stories to challenge stereotypes and redefine Asian and British identities.

● The Land Where Ghosts Could Speak	Runtime	Director
UK, 2024	14 Mins	Tianhui Wu
The Land Where Ghosts Could Speak unearths buried memories, revealing the tension between personal recollection and generational silence.

● The Song of My Life	Runtime	Director
UK, 2024	10 Mins	Sadia Pineda Hameed
This karaoke-style video layers familial trauma with matrilineal storytelling, juxtaposing spoken and unspoken narratives passed between generations. The film's format playfully parodies popular karaoke videos while addressing profound emotional and cultural resonances.

● Trailers (RoCH Fans and Legends)	Runtime	Director
UK, 2015	4 Mins	susan pui san lok
Using martial arts fight sequences interwoven with Google Street View imagery, this work questions authenticity and place-making in the diasporic experience. The playful combination of mundane suburban streets and mythical landscapes evokes the diasporic tension between memory and reality.

● Sauna Bath

Steamy Intimacies is back! For our third edition, we present a selection of Taiwanese video maverick Shu Lea Cheang's early films from the 90s and 00s—desirous and slippery, playful and unrestrained. Splash with us as we deep dive into dripping music video caves where moans and beats echo all around, followed by a long night's unwinding among sweat-soaked comrades, new and old.

A ticket grants you access to the screening, a 60-minute sauna session, and a complimentary snack bag (vegan and gluten-free options available).

Content Notes: Some films in the programme contain explicit nudity, unsimulated sex and flashing images.

● Coming Home Taiwan, 1995	Runtime 5 Mins	Director Shu Lea Cheang

Two women—one white, the other Asian—attempt to fit into a Japanese bathtub. The awkward fitting of bodies into a small space is one of many allegorical scenarios dramatised in a pressing appeal for lesbian rights.

● Sex Fish Taiwan, 1993	Runtime 6 Mins	Director Shen Jinghao
----------------------------	-------------------	--------------------------

A euphoric lesbian sex video features a group of women in a frenzy of erotic scenes accompanied by poetry, dripping water, fancy goldfish, and an ecstatic score.

● Sex Bowl Taiwan, 1994	Runtime 8 Mins	Director Shu Lea Cheang
----------------------------	-------------------	----------------------------

Sport becomes a site for sexual play and celebratory eroticism in this music video-like collage of fetishes.

● Fingers and Kisses Taiwan, 1993	Runtime 5 Mins	Director Shen Jinghao
--------------------------------------	-------------------	--------------------------

Cheang takes her camera to the streets for a candid glimpse of lesbian sexuality in public. If Asian women and lesbians both share a certain degree of invisibility in society, the film offers a bold representation of both, but also a challenge to the question “What do lesbians do?”

● LOVEME2030 Taiwan, 2005	Runtime 30 Mins	Director Shu Lea Cheang
------------------------------	--------------------	----------------------------

LOVEME not now, not here. LOVEME when I depart. Two young LOVEME agents, Natsuo and Hako, are dispatched from Tokyo to Paris to infiltrate Paris' LOVEME underground in the thick of the night. They make a reservation for a love hotel rendezvous in 2030, deferring all unfinished love stories until the year 2030.

● Community: Queer East Industry Day

4 May
BFI Southbank
11:00 – 20:00

Queer East Industry is our initiative to connect with emerging curators, film-makers, community facilitators, film students, researchers and like-minded industry professionals. It aims to utilise shared resources, exchange innovative ideas, and advocate for best practices in advancing the film sector.

Since 2020, Queer East has become a beacon for alternative, radical and multifaceted LGBTQ+ and Asian storytelling, and has gained widespread recognition from the industry, creatives, and the wider public in the UK and beyond. This newly launched industry programme will create a space for industry practitioners to discuss the pressing issues affecting the exhibition of queer, Asian, and alternative cinema. Queer East Industry Day is jam-packed with activities, including talks, panels, and networking sessions. We will invite guest speakers from queer festivals and grassroots film collectives who have dared to challenge existing industry frameworks, and facilitate a network for knowledge sharing on audience engagement.

With thanks to the BFI Inclusion Team.

Through José Esteban Muñoz's and Saidiya Hartman's ideas of queer ephemera and critical fabulation, Misha Zakharov's lecture performance An Ass-Shaped Butterfly provides a speculative, reparative reading of the stage persona of Erik Kurmangaliyev. This Kazakh operatic counter-tenor had a uniquely high-pitched voice, and became a fixture of the post-Soviet 1990s queer scene by starring in Ukrainian theatre maker Roman Viktyuk's extravagant Moscow production of David Henry Hwang's M. Butterfly.

Accompanied by a specifically designed libretto, the lecture will be followed by the rare screening of Rustam Khamdamov's magical and irreverent Vocal Parallels—Kurmangaliyev's single feature film appearance, where he demonstrates his extraordinary vocal prowess alongside some of Kazakhstan's most acclaimed opera singers, including Roza Dzhamanova and Bibigul Tulegenova.

● Introduction

This screening brings together the work of queer East and Southeast Asian artists based in Scotland, showcasing bold explorations of identity, transformation, and community. The films in this programme experiment with dynamic visual narratives that challenge cultural and bodily boundaries, blurring the lines between reality and fiction, self and other. From fictional work to artist moving image work, these films offer a range of experiences where body and identity intersect with culture and memory.

Florence To will introduce this event by presenting an expansive portrait of queer East and Southeast Asian filmmaking in Scotland today.

Presented in partnership with Scottish Queer International Film Festival (SQIFF).

● Introduction

This heartwarming Indian drama is about the struggles of a loving gay couple, Kartik and Aman, who live in Mumbai. Their relationship comes under strain when one of them has a fling, resulting in a domestic crisis. Meanwhile, Kartik’s parents also face a personal dilemma after they have an argument. Will these two couples ever be able resolve their differences—and can their relationships stand the test of time? A follow-up film to the acclaimed Evening Shadows, Kuch Sapney Apne sensitively explores what happens when relationships are challenged by uncomfortable truths.

Boasting fantastic songs by acclaimed Indian composers and singers, this insightful drama explores love’s complicated realities.

● Theatre

Thought-provoking theatre exploring the experience of two queer Singaporeans as they grow older. Based on true accounts, the show delves into relationships, family, insecurity, kindness and safety.

Qing and E are navigating life as queer individuals in their fifties. Qing is struggling to deal with the aftermath of a relationship ending after 20 years, and E is the sole-caregiver to a mother who doesn't fully accept her.

Written and directed by Chng Yi Kai, When the cloud catches colours is a verbatim play that explores what lies ahead for people who have spent most of their lives in the margins, and how a sense of safety can change for a queer person in Singapore as they get older. It offers a timely reflection on queer resilience after the country repealed the British colonial law section 377A, criminalising sex between adult males, in 2023.

Post-show talk on Fri 25 April. Free to same-day ticket holders.

● Dance

Longing to reconnect with Hong Kong, her birthplace, the artist Winnie Ho uses the concept of wok chi (鑊氣), the fleeting energy of wok cooking which gives Cantonese cuisine its distinct flavour, as a metaphor for her diasporic and queer identity.

Blending physical performance, immersive scenography, and sensory dramaturgy, aWakening transcends the traditional boundaries of contemporary dance, reflecting on cultural loss and identity through past memories, while imagining new horizons. The audience is transported into a universe oscillating between reality and imagination, where food becomes both a cultural anchor and a means of exploring collective memory.

This performance is followed by a post-show talk.

Presented in partnership with QUEERCIRCLE

{ guttural },,,{ fleshless } conjures a spectrum of embodiment, exploring artistic projects, experiments, and practices that range from the enfleshed to the ephemeral, the bodily to the intangible. Rooting itself in the body as the site and host of infinite, uncomparable forms of bodily knowledges, the exhibition expands the notion of embodiment into virtual, durational, and participatory realms.

By foregrounding embodied and process-driven practices, { guttural },,,{ fleshless } invites visitors to engage sensorially, and to blur the lines between spectator, witness, and participant. The exhibition presents works across prose, drawing, computer games, sculptural installation and painting, exploring topics ranging from nightlife, foraging, the unseen, past lives, rituals, site responsiveness, and translation.

The exhibition's public programme extends the core conceptual investigation by embracing the unrehearsed. Alongside curator tours, artist talks, and play-throughs, Min Yu and By Hand will be activating the exhibition space through a live tattoo performance and an acupressure workshop respectively.

Renowned Taiwanese queer writer and researcher Chi Ta-Wei will join us for a conversation about his 1995 queer sci-fi novel The Membranes. Chi will reflect on his journey over the past decades, as he has sought to advance popular and academic understandings of Taiwanese LGBTQ+ literary history.

The Membranes is a classic of queer speculative fiction in the Sinophone world. Chi Ta-wei weaves dystopian tropes—heirloom animals, radiation-proof combat drones, sinister surveillance technologies—into a sensitive portrait of one young woman's quest for self-understanding.
